

WHO WE ARE

Hearts In Mind Counseling Clinicians are diverse and have a multitude of trainings in specialty areas to meet your mental health needs.

WHAT WE OFFER

Helping individuals, couples, and families navigate and understand their purpose in life while providing relatable life experiences to address their circumstances.

OUR PROCESS

Upon contacting Hearts in Mind Counseling, our staff will set up a consultation appointment for you with a therapist that best matches your areas of concerns for treatment.

At your first appointment, your therapist will discuss confidentiality of treatment information and the fees for services. Your therapist will also fully discuss your areas of concerns, the services they offer, and begin to set up a custom plan to meet your treatment goals. If for some reason our office cannot meet your needs, we do work with you to locate a suitable referral.

DID YOU KNOW?

01

Anxiety disorders are the most common mental disorder in the US, affecting about 40 million adults. And that doesn't even include all of the people who deal with low-grade anxiety and aren't diagnosed with an anxiety disorder.

02

In 2019, the World Health Organization declared burnout an official medical diagnosis, proving that burnout is truly a problem that plagues modern workers. Most people live in a stormy sea of never-ending to-do lists that include work responsibilities, child care, social lives, romantic relationships and household duties.

03

Meditation is a highly effective way of dealing daily with stress, depression and anxiety. Researchers think that meditation can improve emotional health because it affects the amygdala, which is a major emotional processing center of your brain. Some research suggests that meditation also slows or stalls age-related changes in the brain.
